Amory of CIA Is Reported Resigning

Herald Tribune News Service

Robert Amory Jr., deputy director for intelligence of the Central Intelligence Agency, is resigning but has accepted an offer from President Kennedy to join the Budget Bureau, it was learned yesterday.

The resignation of Amory, 47-year-old former Harvard law professor, was seen here as related to the general re-vamping of the top echelon of the CIA by Mr. Kennedy. The President has been advised in this process by his brother, Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy.

As deputy for intelligence-gathering, Amory was not involved in covert operations, such as Cuba, and therefore was never subject to the type of criticism leveled against former CIA director Allen Dulles and Richard M. Bissell, former deputy director of CIA for plans, who ran the Cuban operation.
